Following the Government response to the Naylor Review, which accepted the call for the disposal of surplus NHS land, what impact has this had on local areas and how successful have NHS organisations been in disposing of their land? Should the proceeds of property disposals be reinvested in the local area or more widely distributed, and how should regional variation in property prices be taken into account? How successful have initiatives such as the 'Homes for Nurses' scheme been in utilising surplus NHS land and what should the next steps be for securing collaboration across local authorities, housing associations and the NHS to enable property disposals to be used for public benefit? Following the allocations of STP capital funding and the Prime Minister's announcement that the NHS Long Term Plan must make better use of capital investment to modernise buildings, what more can be done to improve infrastructure and what impact has funding and estate strategies had on generating efficiencies?
