- 10.05 - 10.55 Priorities for science and innovation spending - emerging tech sectors, regional economies and leveraging private R&D investment
What is the likely impact of the Government's pledge of up to 2.4% of UK GDP for R&D by 2027 on the UK's international positioning in research and on encouraging private investment? Are the emerging tech sectors identified for the Industrial Strategy Challenge Fund the most likely contenders for enabling the UK to take world-leading positions; which other sectors should be considered? What has been the impact of Science and Innovation Audits on effectively focusing regions on areas of existing R&D strengths and what more needs to be done to further develop clusters? How can the increased public investment in UK research and innovation be utilised most effectively; for example what is the right balance between the Industrial Strategy Challenge Fund, HEIF allocations and QR funding through REF? What are the early indicators from the Innovation Loans pilots, and is there a case for legislating to allow Innovate UK to take equity stakes in start-ups and scale-ups as an alternative form of investment? How effective are R&D tax credits as a tool for encouraging private investment and what steps can be taken to increase their up-take by eligible businesses?
Ian Taylor, Chairman, UK Innovation & Science Seed Fund and former Minister, Science, Space & Technology, Department for Trade and Industry (1994-97)

- 11.40 - 12.30 Addressing the challenges for commercialisation of research - managing IP, encouraging spin-outs and the licensing of university IP, and making the most of existing infrastructure and the Catapult Centre network
What more could be done to improve IP management in universities - for example increasing the time, funding and other resources invested in commercialisation activity, and growing the number of staff involved and developing their skills? What is the potential of the Science and Innovation Audits to create a more even distribution of IP income between the very successful commercialising universities and other research-intensive institutions with potentially exploitable IP assets? How can the new University Enterprise Zones best support local innovative businesses to grow? Is the existing scientific infrastructure, including the Catapult Centre network, being maximised by universities and businesses?
