What can be learnt from examples of providers and commissioners overcoming the challenges of delivering Personal Health Budgets (PHBs) across an integrated care system - such as working across funding streams that have different eligibility criteria? With NHS England providing £3.8m for Clinical Commissioning Groups (CCGs) to set up personal health budgets (PHBs), what further steps should be taken to prepare for rolling out budgets more widely? How can the challenges of setting up the infrastructure for budget-setting and monitoring be addressed - such as delivering quality assurance across a broader range of service providers, some of which might currently be outside the remit of the CQC? What impact will the roll-out of PHBs for people with long-term conditions from April 2015 have on financial planning for health and social care commissioners and providers, and what services might be vulnerable to decommissioning with the extension of PHBs? What further information might be gathered to assess the cost-effectiveness of budgets, and how can value be best measured?

Is enough being done to raise awareness of PHBs; what more can be done to improve the take-up of budgets for people on continuing healthcare? What further opportunities exist for involving charity and voluntary organisations in educating and supporting people who are eligible for PHBs? What can be learnt from the new demonstrator pilot sites on delivering personal budgets for people with mental health illnesses, or elderly or very young patients? Is enough being done to learn from people about their own care support, and to enable co-production of care? What lessons can be learnt from rolling out PHBs to people on NHS Continuing Healthcare for extending budgets to people with long-term conditions?
