Stuart Hobley, Head, Heritage Lottery Fund London
- 9.40 - 10.30 Next steps for cultural education, tackling barriers to access and developing creative districts
What are the challenges for removing barriers to access to culture, and to what extent would proposed schemes in the Mayor's manifesto - such as the annual 'London Borough of Culture' - impact on access and uptake? How might the arts and associated professions be made accessible for more young Londoners, in light of aims in Government's recent Culture White Paper, and where are there opportunities for increasing diversity within arts organisations? How could the UK's decision to leave the EU have an impact on the Capital's arts landscape? Where might there be the possibility for planning and infrastructure to support the arts in the Capital, and what are the implications of planning policies for cultural institutions and businesses? Do the Mayor's 'Creative Enterprise Zones' provide a basis for artists to be able to 'flourish' in the city? How might policy makers, city planners, businesses and other parties encourage cultural activity in outer boroughs, and what can be learnt from the experiences of areas such as Croydon, in terms of regeneration and cultural heritage?
