In light of concerns relating to European funding from sources such as the European Regional Development Fund, what should be the priorities for government action and what lessons can be drawn from commercial investment in Scottish housing that is continuing despite political and economic uncertainty? In addition to investment, such as the Housing Infrastructure Fund, and zoned housing land through increased use of Simplified Planning Zones, what further steps are needed to unlock housing land? What support is needed to mitigate potential implications of increased planning fees on housing delivery? With the Scottish Government investing in less traditional house building methods - such as offsite construction, which sees sections of buildings pre-assembled in a factory - what more can be done to stimulate growth of these sectors, given their potential to create jobs and reduce costs? What more needs to be done to ensure the construction industry has the skills and flexibility to respond to changing sector priorities - such as an increased role for offsite construction - and ongoing housing delivery targets? Given concerns over a construction skills shortage following Brexit, what should the industry be putting into place to meet the challenges - including widening routes to employment - and where is support from Government needed?

What progress is being made in ensuring house builders are designing and building homes that reflect a range of individual needs, for example, the elderly, first time buyers or those with disabilities, and what more needs to be done to guarantee it is taken into consideration within social housing, the private rented sector and private builds? In addition to schemes such as Help to Buy, what more needs to be done to support first time buyers to acquire homes that meet their needs in terms of location and design? Given research demonstrating the links between housing and health, what further steps need to be taken to ensure the importance of place and communities is recognised at the early stages of planning?
