- 9.55 - 10.40 Commissioning, developing service delivery and next steps for the workforce
How successfully is innovation in healthcare delivery being promoted by commissioning and regulatory bodies such as NHS England and NICE, and should more be done beyond their statutory duties? What challenges have emerged in the process of establishing Academic Health Science Networks (AHSNs) as they seek to incorporate education, clinical research, informatics, innovation, training and education and healthcare delivery, and how have these been addressed; are there notable examples of best practice? How should the progress of the Innovation, Health and Wealth and Health Education England framework to embed innovation in training and education programmes for the NHS workforce be measured, and what more should be done to increase the uptake of innovation amongst longer-term NHS employees?
Dr Maire Smith, Innovation Consultant and Director, Training for Innovation
Dr Chris Streather, Managing Director, Health Innovation Network South London
Dr Jo Roberts, Clinical Lead for Innovation, Engagement and Communication, South Devon and Torbay Clinical Commissioning Group
Sir Cyril Chantler, Chairman, University College London Partners

- 11.35 - 12.25 Medicines and technologies: improving patient outcomes and reducing costs
Following the incorporation of the NHS Technology Adoption Centre within NICE, and with value based pricing due from January 2014, how can the adoption of innovative technologies and medicines be accelerated to improve patient outcomes and financial savings? How successful have incentives and investments, as identified in Creating Change: Innovation Health and Wealth One Year On, been in encouraging providers? In what ways should the challenges of constraints on funding for research be addressed and, following the publication of the Medical Innovation Bill, to what extent would a relaxation in regulatory processes facilitate increased innovation? What more should be done to promote efficient working practices between the healthcare, pharmaceutical and technology industries to aid innovation, and how should these be applied in collaboration with the NHS and third sector?
