- 9.05 - 9.50 Joining up services, pooling budgets and measuring success
Following the publication of the Shared Commitment to coordinated care, what are the main challenges for national and local bodies in delivering integration – organisational, financial and cultural – and how successfully are they being addressed? What are the early indicators for how effectively Health and Wellbeing Boards, local authorities and Clinical Commissioning Groups are working together to commission integrated care and to involve charities, community groups and patients in the design of services? With appointed areas due to pioneer change, what support must be given to local organisations to provide effective integrated care in their communities, and how can it be ensured that standards are consistently high? With the spending review allocating £3.8bn from the NHS budget towards social care, what are the next steps for pooling budgets and for creating a 'robust, shared electronic record' between bodies in health and care? With the Shared Commitment to focus on people's experience, and the Minister for Care and Support suggesting more work is needed to establish the potential for savings with more certainty, how should the success of integration be measured?
