Elizabeth Wade, Deputy Director of Policy, NHS Confederation
- 9.35 - 10.25 Towards April 2014: Commissioning, personalisation and measuring success
What impact is the focus on increasing patient personalisation having on the wider commissioning process? To what extent do commissioners and the health and care workforce have sufficient expertise for patient centred care, and what more can be done to deliver and inform patients with a wide range of options? How can challenges of implementation, such as the widening of eligibility beyond Continuing Healthcare, be addressed? What more can be done to safeguard patients with complex co-morbidities who rely on third-party support in managing personal budgets? How can challenges in shaping personalisation for specific groups, such as the elderly, vulnerable, or very young patients, be overcome? How can emerging legal challenges, such as the ability to prove the purchasing of services, be best tackled? With personal health budgets being allocated for a wide range of health issues, and with regional variations in service provision, how can success be best measured at a national level?
Rachel King, Personalisation Coordinator, Lambeth Clinical Commissioning Group and Lambeth Council

- 11.30 - 12.25 Integrating personal budgets in health and social care
How effectively are new bodies such as Clinical Commissioning Groups and Health and Wellbeing Boards working together with providers and service users? How can patients be fully supported in developing their personal budgets across integrated health and care? What impact is personalisation having on financial planning within health and social care institutions? What can be learned from the pioneer pilot sites in integrating care services? How can it be ensured that patients and providers know where central responsibility lies for the management of services? To what extent can patients gain from care services which are not free at the point of access? What support exists to enable third-party engagement, particularly from family members? To what extent can service integration help with the reduction of hospital admissions for patients?
