What impact has the introduction of waiting time targets had on improving access to mental health services, and with NHS England setting out plans for patients with depression and anxiety to be treated within six weeks of referral from April 2016, how can further challenges around access to services be overcome? In light of increasing numbers of mental health patients being sent far from their homes for treatment, what more can be done to relieve the pressure on beds in mental health hospitals and services? In addition to improving access to talking therapies and increasing funding for child mental health services, what are the next steps for enhancing the treatment of mental health issues in children? How can health and social care professionals ensure that effective treatment and support is carried on past the age of 18 and patients are not overlooked in the transition to adult mental health care services? What more can be done to ensure that vulnerable groups receive appropriate levels of mental health support services? How can technology and online resources be effectively utilised in supporting and treating patients with mental health issues?
