

The UK film industry and the film policy review

Westminster Media Forum Keynote Seminar

Jeremy Michaels, Oliver & Ohlbaum Wednesday 18th April 2012

Contents

Section 1

How does the "UK film" sector perform?

Section 2

What does the film policy review suggest is the problem, and what should be done? What are the issues raised by the film policy review?

Section 3

A suggested focus going forward?

Summary

The UK film sector

UK indie film box office share growing, and significantly so in 2011...

- This may be at the expense of US indies rather than the major US studios
- Over the last 20 years UK indies have had just 6 truly global, breakout 'hits' out of a total of just over 2,600 films* produced (a strike rate of approximately 1 in every 430 films)
- The UK remains a centre for offshoring production for the US studios
- Successful UK independent films occur on average roughly every 3-4 years, but with significant 'lean' spells where there is no breakout 'hit' UK indie film
- When they do succeed, talent (directors and producers) tend to gravitate towards Hollywood (or the US writ large) and/or bigger budget projects
- The UK has not managed to establish a sustainable, truly indie "studio" over the last 40 years of policy intervention

³

UK box office is still growing – but definitions are important

Some important distinctions need to be made when discussing 'the UK film market', as many analysts and commentators only consider either UK independent film production, or a combination of UK indie, and US studio films made in the UK

What is the UK film market?

- Films shown in the UK
- Films made in the UK
- Films that reflect UK culture and/or made by UK independent companies

Four key components of UK box office

UK indie film share has grown since 2004 (and significantly in 2011) but often this is as a result of individual successes. The share of UK produced studio films fluctuates more (8.5% in 2009; 26.2% in 2005). Non-UK indies are losing share

UK box office by source of production; 2004-2011

UK indie film share remains relatively small overseas

Whilst 2011 has been an outstanding year, it bears repeating that the contribution of the UK independent film sector to global box office remains relatively small in comparison to the contribution of US studio films made in the UK

UK indie and US studio film box office share, US, Japan, France, Germany, Australia and Spain; 2010-2011

Source: BFI, Rentrak, Box Office Mojo, Oliver & Ohlbaum analysis

What happens to globally successful UK filmmakers?

Considering the 6 UK global breakout 'hits' of the last 20 years, we have to ask what happens to the UK talent behind these successes. In most cases they gravitate towards Hollywood and/or bigger budgets. Is this not success for the UK?

Chariata of Fire 4004	$59m US	Director: Hugh Hudson	Director: Greystoke (Warner Bros) - 1984 Director: Revolution (Goldcrest Films) - 1985
Chariots of Fire - 1981	$21m R.o.W	Producer: David Puttnam	Producer: P'tang, Yang (Goldcrest Films) - 1982 Producer: The Killing Fields (Goldcrest Int'l) - 1984
Four Weddings and a Funeral - 1994	$52m US	Director: Mike Newell	Director: Donnie Brasco (Mandalay) - 1997 Director: Pushing Tin (Fox) - 1999
	$193m R.o.W	Producer: Tim Bevan	EP: The Hudsucker Proxy (Warner Bros) - 1994 Producer: French Kiss (Fox) - 1995
The Full Monty - 1997	$46m US	Director: Peter Cattaneo	Director: Lucky Break (FilmFour) – 2001 Director: Opal Dream (BBC Films) - 2006
	$212m R.o.W	Producer: Ulberto Pasolini	Producer: The Closer You Get (Redwave) - 2000 Producer: Emperors New Clothes (FilmFour) - 2001
Billy Elliot - 2000	$22m US	Director: Stephen Daldry	Director: The Hours (Paramount) - 2002 Director: The Reader (Weinstein) - 2008
	$87m R.o.W	Producer: Jonathan Finn	Producer: My Little Eye (Studio Canal Plus) - 2002 CP: Long Time Dead (Working Title) - 2002
Slumdog Millionaire - 2008	$141m US	Director: Danny Boyle	Director: 127 Hours (Fox) - 2010 Director: Trance (Fox) - 2012
	$237m R.o.W	Producer: Christian Colson	Producer: The Descent Part 2 (Celador) - 2009 Producer: 127 Hours (Fox) - 2010
The Kings Speech - 2010	$139m US	Director: Tom Hooper	Director: Les Miserables (Universal) – 2012 Next project - TBC
	$275m R.o.W	Producer: Ian Canning	Producer: Oranges & Sunshine (Cohen MG) – 2010 Producer: Shame (Fox) - 2011

Summary

The film policy review

The film policy review believes that there is a market failure in the provision of UK film – and that this worth addressing...

- Possible solutions, in order to create a sizeable and sustainable indie production and distribution sector include:
 - the redirection of public funding and tax break benefits to leading, successful UK producers and distributors, and
 - helping to secure more outlets for UK films (via UK broadcasters and overseas promotion),
- A focus on developing skills, and stronger enforcement of copyright infringement are also recommended within the review

The film policy review

Our summary

ASSESSMENT

A. UK audiences prefer UK indie films, and they add to the cultural value of the UK

Is this about market failure...

... or is it just the way it is?

B. The market underprovides for this demand, mainly due to the scale advantage of US films in their home market

C. The UK should remain an attractive place for the US studios to do business

D. Web 2.0 should help open up the global market for UK films – but piracy could threaten all film investment

PROPOSALS

- 1. Broadcasters should show more UK films
- 2. Direct funding to UK indie films should remain (both for R&D and production)
- 3. Expand global reach through co-production agreements and support initiatives
- 4. Allow rollover of funds for successful UK independent filmmakers
- 5. Tax breaks should remain but benefits should flow more to producers and distributors than UK investors
- 6. The skills base in the UK should be nurtured and developed as much as possible
- 7. Strong enforcement of copyright infringement is required both within the UK and globally
- 8. It should also be easier to show copyright material legitimately, especially orphan works and niche material

The film policy review

Is there a market failure and can it be resolved?

A. UK audiences prefer UK indie films, and they add to the cultural value of the UK

B. The market underprovides for this demand, mainly due to the scale advantage of US films in their home market

1. Broadcasters should show more UK films

2. Direct funding to UK indie films should remain (both for R&D and production)

3. Expand global reach through co-production agreements and support initiatives

4. Allow rollover of funds for successful filmmakers

These propositions appear to be ones that suggest that some sort of systematic market failure is arising... how true is this view, or is it just a fact of life to be accepted?

How much more do UK consumers value UK film and is that enough to justify intervention?

What about the performance of UK films overseas, in the US especially? Can this be systematically addressed?

Will co-production deals and partnerships, British film week and other initiatives really tip the scales far enough to sustain and develop the British film industry?

The film policy review

What is the role of public funding and tax breaks?

A. UK audiences prefer UK indie films, and they add to the cultural value of the UK

2. Direct funding to UK indie films should remain (both for R&D and production)

B. The market underprovides for this demand, mainly due to the scale advantage of US films in their home market

4. Allow rollover of funds for successful filmmakers

C. The UK should remain an attractive place for the US studios to do business

5. Tax breaks should remain – but benefits should flow more to producers and distributors than UK investors

These recommendations focus on building a financially successful sector, but what are the costs and benefits of redistributing funding towards UK indie producers and distributors?

Regardless of policy intervention, won't a majority of successful filmmakers end up working in Hollywood and/or working on US studio productions in the UK? Is that not UK success?

Summary

A focus for the future?

The UK could just focus on being (1) a "greenhouse" for Hollywood (and, perhaps, Silicon Valley), and (2) a good, cost effective place to make studio films...

- Can the UK really compete with Hollywood by attempting to replicate the studio system?
- We have a proven track record of developing talent which can succeed in Hollywood – continuing to act as a "greenhouse" producing innovative output, people and ideas would continue to benefit the UK whilst operating within the dominant global film system
- Hollywood has an unrivalled ability to distribute content globally and profitably
- Betting against Hollywood has proved unsuccessful for the last century today Silicon Valley is best placed to rival it (but don't bet on its demise)
- If the UK rather than competing with Hollywood aimed to supply output, talent and innovative ideas to Silicon Valley and Hollywood, would that not be considered success?

A focus for the future?

Can Hollywood be beaten or bested?

Taking on Hollywood has been attempted – unsuccessfully – too many times for people to forget their history lessons, and believe the hype... but if anywhere could mount a serious challenge, it would be Silicon Valley

The succession of Hollywood dynasties: 1900-present

	Hollywood 1.1 (Thomas Edison) 1900-1913	Hollywood 1.2 (Adolph Zukor) 1900-1949	Hollywood 1.3 (Lew Wasserman) 1949-1964	Hollywood 1.4 (VHS then DVD) 1975-present	Hollywood 1.5 (Ted Turner) 1976-present	Hollywood 1.6 (Rise of Netflix) 1997-present	Hollywood 2.0 (Gen. YouTube) 2010-present
Core business	Manufacturing cameras/film equipment (Edison patents)	Real estate – production and distribution integrated (birth of studio system)	Advertising and promotion – TV drives promotion – the summer blockbuster and foreign films remain	Consumer electronics – studios tried to restrict VCR (it became the main revenue source – quality falls)	Cable – physical wiring laid the ground for 'narrowcasting' – a race to the bottom in production costs	Streaming – Hollywood was up in arms, but in 2010 streaming revenue passed DVD revenue (content is king)	User-generated content
Target demographic	Professionals and prosumers	Mass audience	Couch potatoes and cineastes	Consumers	Advertisers	Consumers	Peers
Killed	When patents expired in 1913	By United States vs Paramount Pictures (1949) banning 'block booking' (selling multiple movies to theatres as a single package)	Still alive, if not robust - coexists with subsequent iterations of Hollywood	Still alive, though in its dotage in its current format – DVD – which is fighting for its life under threat from digital formats	Still kicking, but YouTube and other user- generated content platforms are slowing it down	Not yet, but individual content creators (HBO via HBO Go, for example) still control Netflix's fate	Anyone can make a decent independent film – narrowcasting at a whole new level – the race to the bottom of production costs continues apace
Driven by	Hardware and infrastructure	Content	Content	Hardware and infrastructure	Hardware and infrastructure	Content	Content

Source: gigaom, Oliver and Ohlbaum Analysis

A focus for the future?

How could the UK film industry best complement and co-operate with the US system?

Stay in touch

Where and how to find us

Next: Get Creative: Make The Most of The Global Opportunities For The UK's Creative & Digital Sectors

When: Thursday May 17th 2012 at BSAC (contact andrea.toth@oando.co.uk for more details)

Email: jeremy.michaels@oando.co.uk

Blog: www.oando.co.uk/blog/tv-content/seconds-away-round-three/

Follow: @OliverOhlbaum